What do Registered Nurses do?

Registered Nurses (RNs) use a large base of knowledge to assess, plan and intervene to promote health, prevent disease and help patients cope with illness. RNs are employed in a wide variety of professional settings, often specializing in their field of practice. When providing direct patient care, nurses observe, assess and record symptoms, reactions and progress which provides the basis for care planning and intervention. They are health educators and advocates for patients, families and communities.

Registered nurses' duties and titles often depend on where they work and the patients they work with. For example, an oncology nurse may work with cancer patients or a geriatric nurse may work with elderly patients. Some RNs combine one or more areas of practice.

Training & Educational Opportunities

You will have plenty of employment options as a registered nurse, but first you will need to earn at least an associate degree. An associate degree in nursing (ADN) includes courses in anatomy, nutrition, chemistry and microbiology among others.

As a Registered Nurse you will:
